

CENTURY

GENERAL INFORMATION

Situated in the very heart of Soho, between Wardour and Dean Street on Shaftesbury Avenue, Century is a private members club, which has been created in a well-proportioned building over four bright and airy floors. The discreet front door belies the extent of the club within. The back elevation overlooks the green leafy gardens of St Anne's Church, which permeates the building with a tranquil rural setting in the West End.

The building has been entirely refurbished, a project which took two years to complete and the final result provides the members with two bars, a multi-media function room, a third floor restaurant and a roof terrace. A limestone staircase accesses the whole venue, which has a timeless quality picked up by the three dominant themes of wood, brick and leather. Pierre and Kathleen Condou, whose vision, specially commissioned the hide furniture in Paris and driving force is behind the concept of Century.

Nick Hales, the Head Chef, worked with the Condous in Soho in the early 90's and then moved on to Le Caprice before returning as Head Chef at L'Odeon and finally on to his current position. His light, well-balanced and seasonal menus have received nothing but praise from the members and guests.

The shareholders are luminaries and high-profile figures in the world of entertainment and media. It was always the intent of the founders to create a new club for those industries, which would provide a spacious and lofty environment for the members to eat, drink and enjoy. The launch in early March 2001 successfully reaped a full quota of membership within three months.
